

Buying at Par, Maturing at Par: The Long-Term Peace of Mind

Description

Steady Eddy

you buy bonds at par, and they mature at par, for predictability. Enjoying those steady, reliable returns without the stock market rollercoaster ride.

For some long-term investors, constantly watching the bond market can feel overkill. After all, if your endgame is the maturity value and interest, why fret over the interim market movements?

a Case for Keeping an Eye Out Yet,

Market Movements Matter: Bond values fluctuate with market changes. Staying informed helps you understand the overall health of your investment and the economy.

Opportunities Knocking: Even as a long-term investor, being aware of significant market shifts could unveil opportunities to adjust your portfolio for better returns or lower risk.

Both Styles, Their Reason

Whether a keen market watcher or a steady investor, both approaches have their merits. The key is aligning your strategy with your investment goals and risk tolerance.

What's Your Bond Philosophy?

Do you prefer to watch your bond portfolio move, or are you more of a long-term, maturing every day investor? Share your bond investment philosophy below!

Source: LinkedIn

Date

04 Dec 2024

Date Created

20 Mar 2024